

Supporting the families of our fallen heroes.

That's the mission of the Hundred Club.

The Hundred Club is the only organization of its kind solely dedicated to supporting the families of fallen police officers and firefighters across all 351 cities and towns in Massachusetts. While many charities assist first responders, The Hundred Club stands apart by providing immediate financial support—regardless of the cause of death—and ongoing care for families when they need it most.

Every year, more than 300 first responders die in the line of duty across the U.S. But today, the greatest threats are often less visible. Cardiac events account for roughly 45% of firefighter deaths, and occupational cancer is now the leading cause, responsible for over 66% of job-related firefighter fatalities. In law enforcement, suicide now regularly exceeds line-of-duty deaths, with more than 150 officers dying by suicide each year, with that number believed to be low due to under-reporting.

In Massachusetts, dozens of active-duty first responders die each year—on the job, from service-connected illnesses, or by suicide—often leaving families without immediate financial relief.

That's the gap The Hundred Club fills. From rapid financial assistance to scholarships and lifelong connection, we are a constant source of strength for those who've lost everything protecting us.
